

Remarkable exclusive photograph taken by Donald B. MacMillan, showing eight snapshots of the midnight sun, at Etah, North Greenland. The shutter of the camera was snapped every twenty minutes as the sun revolved from left to right. Mr. MacMillan's second article appears in this issue of The Star.

Count and Countess Boni de Castellane, who have arrived in the United States for a visit. The count is the son of former Anna Gould by her first marriage to Count de Castellane. She is now the Duchess de Talleyrand.

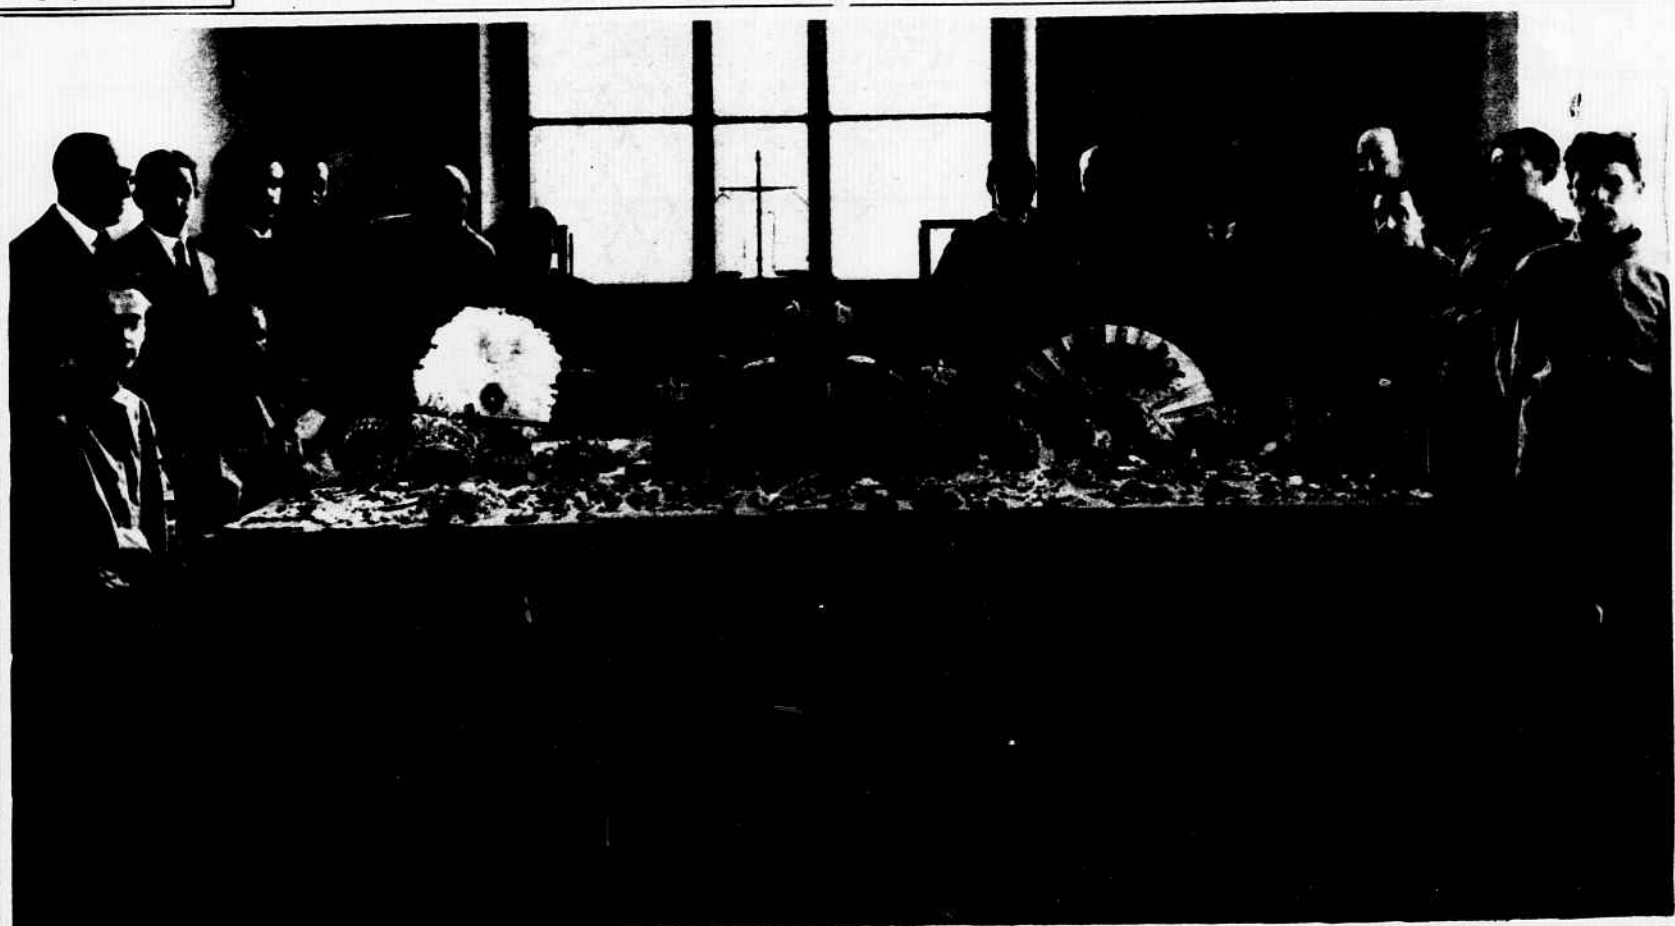

Body of the "Flying Parson" (Lieut. Maynard) arrives in New York, en route to Maynard, N. C., for burial. Lieut. Maynard, one of the prominent figures in the United States air service, was killed in a 3,000-foot fall at Rutland, Vt.

Lieut. Doolittle's one stop in his recent airplane flight from the Atlantic to the Pacific—at Kelly Field, Tex. At this point he was met by his two-year-old son, James H. jr., better known to the air service men as "Petie."

Jess Sweetser, twenty years old, winner of the amateur golf championship at Brookline (Mass.) Country Club.

Russian crown jewels, worth $60,000,000,000, now in hands of soviet government. This is the first photograph ever taken of the great collection. The men around the table include the soviet treasure fund administrators and Farberger (second from left), the French jewel expert, who made official valuation.

Lake Michigan fish grow large, according to this picture, which shows a sturgeon 8 feet 9 inches in length, captured by a Chicago fisherman not far from Michigan boulevard. The fish was shot before it could be landed in a small boat.